Q3 As you may know, Congress is considering the Kids Online Safety Act, or KOSA, which would require social media platforms such as Instagram and YouTube to change their algorithms that have been responsible for getting kids addicted to social media and promoting posts about eating disorders, suicide, substance abuse, and sexual exploitation. It would also impose penalties on companies whose features expose children to these types of harms. This legislation would also provide children and parents with new safeguards and controls to protect themselves online, and a place to report harms to social media platforms. Opponents of KOSA say that parents already have enough tools to protect children and teens online, and new laws could limit free speech.
